Economic Integration and Disintegration in Europe: 2nd ...

Historically, there are several examples of disintegration – tentatively conceived as withdrawal from (some form of) membership – that have occurred throughout the history of European integration: Algeria (1962), Greenland (1985) and Saint Barthélemy (2012) have departed from the European Community/Union. None of these entities, however, have left the Community/Union as a 'full' member, as is most likely going to be the case with the UK.

Europe Between Integration and Disintegration

The recent scholarship on disintegration claims that prior theories of integration cannot fully explain EU disintegration (Webber, 2014; Eppler, Anders, Tuntschew, 2016; Vollaard, 2018; Jones, 2018). However, the alternatives provided are still limited and at best offer testable propositions. For instance, it is hard to translate Webber's disintegrative geopolitical trends into the EU's current scenario. Though Euroscepticism is on the rise within Europe, it does not have ...

Some European left socialist think tanks, such as the Rosa Luxemburg Stiftung, now speak more openly about the need for 'more Europe – not less'.⁹ And outside Britain and some Nordic countries, Green Parties also strongly advocate close EU integration and even a more federalist Union. The far left, however, is divided between unreconstructed advocates of 'national sovereignty' and ...

Populists in Europe are contesting the perceived benefits of economic integration between countries. This column uses data on trade frictions to estimate the long-run impact of trade frictions on GDP if countries in Europe were to be more or less integrated. Negative between-country impacts, such as from Brexit or an EU collapse, imply a GDP reduction of between 1-3%.

Economic Integration and Political Disintegration

Over the period 2016-2018 a spirit of relief characterised the public debate on the economic development of EU countries: after several years of crisis large parts of the European economy were experiencing solid and stable growth. Unfortunately, this temporary improvement in business cycle conditions has already come to an end, and a downswing has been gaining momentum over the course of the ...

European integration, making it more of an awkward partner in European integration than most other Member States have been. The UK's opposition to European integration stems from the UK's domestic politics, where, in contrast with the situation in other Member States, British politicians have rarely if ever pursued anything more than a transactional approach to EU membership. The UK's ...
